Re: Conflict Minerals Certification

To Whom It May Concern:

We acknowledge receipt of your recent inquiry concerning the applicability of Section 1502 of the Dodd-Frank Act (the "Conflict Minerals Law") to products supplied to you by one or more of the members of the CIRCOR family of companies.

CIRCOR International shares its customers' commitment to developing greater transparency in our supply chains and to the elimination from our products of "Conflict Minerals," i.e., Tin, Tantalum, Tungsten and Gold sourced from the Democratic Republic of Congo or one of its nine adjacent countries (collectively, the "Covered Area"). We also take seriously our obligation to comply with the Section 1502 of the Dodd-Frank Act and its implementing regulations.

We have developed a company-wide policy reflecting our commitment to transparency in managing our supply chains in compliance with the Conflict Minerals Law. We are currently undertaking a "due diligence" process of carefully examining our supply chains for materials that go into our products with the goal of determining (i) whether any of our products contain a Conflict Mineral and (ii) if so, whether the Conflict Mineral was sourced from the Covered Area. At this time, we have not developed sufficient information to permit us to respond categorically as to whether or not the products we supply to you contain a Conflict Mineral sourced from the Covered Area.

As you may know, regulated companies must publicly report by May 31, 2014 the results of their examinations of products manufactured during the current calendar year. We intend to conclude our examination after the close of the year. We also intend to inform you, our customer, of our findings with respect to the products we supply to your organization. We anticipate that we will be able to supply this information to you on time to permit your organization to include our findings in your public report and/or in your reports to your customers.

We appreciate your interest as a valued customer of CIRCOR products. We are committed to maintaining transparency in our relationship and to responding as a reliable supplier of high quality solutions to fit your customer needs.

Sincerely,

CIRCOR International, Inc.
